EVENING GOWN OF PLAID CHIFFON AND IRISH LACE.

Women are devoted to the airy, fairy type of gown, and especially is this true when applied to the evening gown. There is no question but that women look best in gowns of this type; there is a certain softening of the figure and a femininity resultant therefrom, not given by any other style of dress. Fashion has fairly run riot in the past summer with gowns of this sort, and the mode is going to last well into the winter. A beautiful model gown of this style is made almost entirely of chiffon frillings and bands and appliques of Irish lace. It is the new Irish lace, the combination of the baby Irish and the French Irish. The skirt and train is simply one succession of plaited chiffon frills after another, separated in groups by bands of the Irish lace. Each of the frills and the sleeves are the same. There is a yoke of chiffon laid in tucks with applique patterns heading a bertha, and sleeve drapery of rare old lace. The only touch of color is a high girdle made of ombre taffeta in shades of rosea green.

evening by the Commercial club, in honor of Commissioner Richards and assistants. The banquet was given at the Hotel Roberts at 8:30. The table decorations were red and pink roses, large center pieces being tastefully arranged in cut glass bowls.
